- b. A friend in need is a friend indeed.
- c. A false friend is worse than a real enemy.

When I was a teenager, I was always curious about what made someone a true friend. To be honest, I found out the answer when I met Laura, my best friend of 30 years now. I'll never forget the day I met her. I was busy preparing for a fundraising event at my school and was going crazy with the tasks. It was extremely important to me because we were going to raise money for street animals. There were too many things to do, and I was running from place to place to get everything done. My teacher told me that I had to add some more activities to the list just before the event. I tried to call some of my classmates to ask for help, but they were all busy. At that moment, Laura, with whom I just had a few words before, suggested helping me with the activities. She was like an angel. We made a to-do list together and worked like bees to complete the tasks. We even stayed up late the night before the event to make sure everything was in order. Thanks to Laura, I was able to arrange everything, and we raised a large sum of money. Following the event, Laura and I became best friends. We were always there for each other when we needed support. We went to the same university and shared a flat for several years. Now, we live in different cities, but we always find time to visit each other. I consider myself extremely lucky to have met a true friend.
